

Medical marijuana: the deception

July 16, 2009

Before beginning, please watch the drugfreeworld.org video advertised on yesterday's page. It debunks the denial; marijuana is a gateway drug.

In collegiate and professional sports, to tell the teams apart, it's simple; they wear different uniforms; the rules regarding home-team choice, make it mandatory.

That's not so in the battles over legalization of drugs. One of the more recent methods being used in the legalization battle, has been to confuse the issues - the creation of a very deceptive, and supposedly "middle ground" type of argument - - - wearing a similar team uniform, so to speak.

This tactic's not only being used in the fight over marijuana legalization, but (also exposing the connection) regarding the legalization of other drugs, (their ultimate goal) this strategy is already in full swing.

If you can't tell the teams and players apart, ... one from another, sports enthusiasts would not be able to follow the action as well and would soon lose interest. Legalizers count on this! In this age of information, few have time to learn all the subtleties of every different issue. Unless one has a child who is a target, this issue is superfluous to most.

Implementing this strategy, using seemingly appealing logic, legalizers established a very deceptive program called "Harm Reduction." Their tactic has been to proclaim, 'drug use will never end; let's make it as safe and as non-punitive as possible.'

Sounds somewhat logical, but make no mistake about it; remember, it's run by the very same people that are working to have all drugs legalized!

While this "sleight-of-hand-deception is disconcerting to those trying to find the truth, this is not the only new tactic. Hiding the truth in lengthy legalese the language on the ballot initiatives, is yet another deception. While looking at the next section, also note: The Players. The following, is an excerpt from "The Arizona Republic", written by David Leibowitz; there's only part here - it continues on, but much of it had to do with the legalization ballot measure in 2002.

"Billionaires Three Less than Honest on Pot Proposition

Twice before, the Billionaires Three have gifted us with their Trojan-horse ballot propositions: drug initiatives sold one way in commercials but written far differently on the ballot. Twice before, this trio has hidden behind cancer patients and won at the polls. On Tuesday, we see if the third time is the charm ...

The Billionaires Three are:

- New York financier George Soros, (for more info on Soros and how they target your children, see "The Drug War")
- Ohio insurance magnate and self-described "functional pothead" Peter Lewis
- and the Valley's very own John Sperling, made rich by his founding of the University of Phoenix."

The article continues and talks of "a lengthy proposition which voters will never struggle through to find out that hidden within, is the goal of bringing illicit drug (heroin, crack, PCP, meth and most every other drug imaginable) be fined instead of incarcerated."

He continues, "If that makes sense to you, I would argue that incarceration, or the threat of it, is about the only leverage society has to get people off drugs and the consequence of using – destroyed lives, crime and violence of all ilks.

This proposition, foisted the cabal's ultimate goal of legalization of all drugs, not just pot, right out front for all to see, . . . if only the electorate had read it in its entirety."

When published, one could reach Leibowitz @ktar.com or (602) 241-6819. His column appear(s?) on Sundays. He can be heard on KTAR 620-AM weekdays from 9 a.m. to noon and seen on KAZ-TV (cable channel 13) weekdays at 10 a.m.

All three billionaires mentioned, have been part of (what he calls a "cabal", I call) "The Cartel of Legalizers"; contributing millions of dollars to finance the ballot initiatives across the nation, legalizing marijuana. Their donations do not stop there; they've also funded the major legalization organizations with generous grants! These "Billionaires Three" have also funded a whole myriad of other leftist agenda-causes, but that's another issue.
